Words from the author:

"As an expert in the development of creative-thinking, I believe in flexible-thinking; to see crying as a language, to respect each other's feelings instead of being angry, and to invent solutions together. One of the tools of creativity is to do the opposite of what is expected, like... crying together. Believe me, if you do it with humor it'll work!

The book has been designed to stimulate regular thinking from all angles (for ages 4 -120)! On the one hand, it teaches readers to listen to crying as a 'secret language' belonging to children who are trying to 'say' deeper things. On the other hand, the story will help to lessen the child's desire to cry over every little thing. On the 'new' hand, it will teach the whole family a new language; the language of Self-Esteem & Self-Respect; the language of good communication and laughter!"
