There was nothing about the Seattle evening to distinguish itself from hundreds of others. Same wind, same drizzly rain. Congested traffic oozing forward at a turgid pace. Dark cloudy sky reflecting thousands of lights from windows, street lamps and signs. But a series of events that were unfolding made the evening decidedly different from any other. In the heart of downtown several friends and recent acquaintances were engaged in a dangerous dance. One old friend was trying to kill another in the misguided hope that he could stuff the metaphorical genie back into its jaundiced bottle; a man who had spent his adult life trying to solve mysteries was reeling from a discovery he hadn't been seeking; another tortured soul who had done his level best to destroy himself was risking his life to save someone he had known for less than a month; and at the center of all these events was a conflict that had existed long before any of these people had been born.
