Living in London was always part of the plan. Ellie just didn't expect to do it alone. Running away and starting anew was the only solution. She set some rules for herself: no connections, no love, no friends. Work would be her only solace. But when she's assigned to train Rhys Edwards, Britain's heartthrob, for his run as Hamlet on West End, all her plans fade away. Ellie soon realizes that just because you're breathing, it doesn't mean you're alive, and she learns it's the connections in life that make it worth living.
