Bella Watson is tired of her job, of her boyfriend, and of her life in general. When she overhears her boyfriend, Kenny, and his brother, Dom, discussing plans to distribute a large shipment of drugs, Dom threatens to kill her. She runs for her life and makes it to the police station where she discovers that the brothers and their family are members of a notorious crime family. It's Officer Daniel Moore's job to escort her to a safe house and keep her alive while she waits to testify during a court hearing. Bella hasn't felt this safe or protector in...well...forever. Tension mounts as an attraction grows between them. Officer Moore struggles with loving again, and Bella, whose father was killed in the Gulf War, must decide if she can live with the violence and worry that come with loving a cop. As the outcome of the hearing looms over their heads, so does the possibility of love.
