Lady Enna Adlard was born mostly blind. She can see colors, but not much beyond that. As such, she never thought that she would get to marry. A woman with her defect would not be a fit wife. However, the king, wanting to shore up his power, has ordered several noble families who support him but despise each other to come to terms. As part of her family's agreement, Lady Enna is to wed Lord Ryder Hennessy, a man she's never met.

Ryder has decided to meet Lady Enna, assuming that he can send her back to her family without marriage once he's seen for himself how disabled she is. Nothing could have prepared him for the lovely, poised young woman who arrived at his castle. Ryder took one look at her and had to have her for his own, despite her blindness.

However, he soon discovers that there is someone bent on causing mischief for his bride. A fall from a horse and a tumble down the steps are more than mere coincidence, but who could stand to gain from hurting such a sweet young woman?
